Hazardous good, a closed book?

If you are not transporting hazardous goods, you usually do not know much about the comprehensive and complicated regulations. But even in companies that deal with the delivery of hazardous goods on a daily basis, there are often misunderstandings or mistakes that may have serious effects.

Did you actually know that conventional promotional gifts may also be hazardous goods? Examples for this include filled gas lighters, matches, glue, etc. Different cosmetic products and sport equipment (table tennis balls) may also be hazardous goods. But there are often dangerous components in complete devices as well – for example, batteries, gas cartridges, etc.

Who is liable for damages and accidents?

If you are not the producer, you should get informed about your merchandise. Because if there is an accident caused by hazardous goods that are either not declared or incorrectly declared, the sender or the client alone is liable for the damage caused.
